

Taking off together: Allianz and Wingly offer innovative insurance coverage

Wingly pilots and passengers now benefit from additional insurance coverage on light airplane flights happening through Wingly. This insurance, tailored for flight sharing and Wingly, is developed within the framework of a European partnership with Allianz GC&S and SAAM Verspieren Group and a unique product in history.

Paris, February 23, 2017 - Wingly announces a European partnership with Allianz Global Corporate & Specialties SE to make the practice of cost shared flight on Wingly even more reliable for its more than 30,000 members. After having democratized flight sharing, Wingly goes further and provides its members with a unique and tailor-made additional insurance, taken out by Allianz and put in place by SAAM Verspieren Group to cover its activities throughout Europe.

Additional covers designed for flight sharing situations

In Europe, in addition to the usual and compulsory insurance to fly in light aircraft (see appendix), the Wingly service now includes additional coverage to increase the existing and mandatory insurance coverage ceilings.

A big step in the general aviation sector

This innovation is the result of the joint work between Wingly, Allianz and SAAM-Verspieren, three leading European companies in their field. Wingly members will now be able to fully benefit from this service entitled: Aircraft Liability Insurance for the Pilot User. Our insurance policy is designed that so that Wingly users never have to face insurance issues on cost shared flight.

Emeric de Waziers, co-founder of Wingly comments: "We have been building a community of trust within Wingly since the beginning. Thanks to this ambitious European partnership with Allianz, we are taking flight sharing to another level by offering broad coverage to our users."

"Flight Sharing is a new practice with a great future because it promotes better economic and social efficiency for light aviation. We are convinced that we have a key role to play in its development, since it is based on trust, a trust strengthened by insurance." declared Laurent Haumont, Deputy Director of SAAM Verspieren Group.

Appendix:

Are cost shared flights on Wingly already covered?

Yes, cost shared flights facilitated by Wingly results in a sharing of costs between the pilot and the passengers on a non-professional basis. Cost shared flights on Wingly are no different from the common use of a light airplane that allows the transportation of a spouse, friends, family or colleagues. In this framework validated by the European Aviation Safety Agency and the UK CAA, which does not generate a profit for the pilots, no additional aircraft insurance is required for third parties. In the event of an accident, all passengers are compensated by the "Third party liability" of the airplane. Since this insurance is compulsory and attached to each airplane within the European Union

About Wingly

Wingly is Europe's leading flight sharing platform, building a global and trusted community for private pilots and passengers. A real pioneer, Wingly has introduced general aviation to collaborative economy.

Through our digital platform, we connect private pilots flying with empty seats with passengers so they can share the costs of a flight. Pilots are able to share their passion for flying and passengers can discover beautiful landscapes from the sky or reach their touristic destination in an extraordinary way. Wingly has 200,600 users registered so far, including 13,500 pilots, and has conducted over 13,000 flights since its launch in 2015. We are democratising mankind's oldest dream of by making private flying a unique and accessible experience for everyone.

Wingly has raised € 2.5 million from a venture capital investor (Howzat Partners) and several private investors such as Philipp Rösler (former German Vice-Chancellor and private pilot) or Stéphane Mayer (CEO of Nexter). Wingly is the winner of the Techcrunch Startup Battlefield at Vivatech in 2018.
